In association with the Pullet Hatcheries & Breeders Association

Welcome to BFREPA LIVE 23!

As I am sure most of you know, this event marks the first time BFREPA has organised our annual free range conference and dinner after many fantastic years with BOCM Pauls and then ForFarmers.

It is a proud moment for BFREPA that we can host this meeting at the Telford Exhibition Centre, and we hope to build on the foundations laid in previous years.

We have thrown the kitchen sink at this event and packed it full of relevant content appertaining to the challenging years that our industry has faced. With over 80 stands, I am sure there is something for every producer.

This year's BFREPA Live event will see several other talks and discussions throughout the day, including a panel on AI vaccination hosted by BFREPA CEO Robert Gooch with APHA's Gordon Hickman, Dave Hodson from Rosehill Poultry, and Crowshall's vet Ian Lowery joining as panellists. The panel will discuss vaccination for AI and debate DEFRA's approach to AI outbreaks across the country.

Later in the day, there will be a series of technical presentations. Gary Ford, Deputy Chief Executive of BEIC will be hosting a discussion on Our Lion Code.

Premier Nutrition's Ralph Bishop will discuss nutritional strategies for extending the laying cycle. From St David's Vets, Charles Macleod will debate whether water is an unavoidable necessity or a vital nutrient for free range flocks.

The day will conclude with a 4:30 p.m. talk by Nick Bailey from Joice & Hill, who will cover the latest in genetics, the latest breeding developments, and the benefits of breeding white hens.

I hope you enjoy this year's conference, which will conclude with a fantastic gala dinner and awards ceremony hosted by Al Murray.

Finally, thanks to our partner Noble Foods, and our sponsors Elanco, Newquip, ForFarmers, and Boehringer Ingelheim. Their support is vital in our first year of arranging this event.

Noble Foods: A word from our partner...

Time seems to have flown by since this event took place last year but, my goodness, what a year it has been.

If you think back to last November's event, the conversations were understandably challenging at all ends of the supply chain but, ultimately, this has led to producers finally finding themselves in arguably a much improved position than they have been for many years. The challenges may change in title, but they are still numerous and ever-present. The question posed to us all is how we future proof the resilience and sustainability of the sector.

Speaking of sustainability, it could be argued this is the most commonly used word in our world currently and, whilst clearly as an industry we must act collectively, and quite rightly focus on the sustainability of the environment, we cannot ignore that financial sustainability is the bedrock from which to build real progress in affecting meaningful and positive change to our environmental challenges.

The very fact that we are looking forward to incredible attendance at this year's event serves only to prove that we care collectively about our industry and that we are keen to ensure we do the right things for its future. But it must be realised that producers are the cornerstone of this industry and are intrinsic in its future growth. Equally important are our consumers. All parties involved across this supply chain must work together to return egg to the correct levels of availability on shelf as a minimum first step in encouraging a much-needed uplift in egg purchase and consumption.

From a Noble perspective it's also been a busy year. The hard yards involved in securing and passing on the necessary price increases whilst at the same time ensuring we are giving some comfort in terms of margin sustainability through our feed linked and forward bought offerings should not be underestimated.

We continue to work hard on the environmental side of things, and great progress has been made on reduced or removed soya rations, understanding the environmental advantages of the white egg production, and working with our partners to grow the appetite for alternative offerings. We have recently committed to substantial investment into expansion of our company owned egg production.

Outside of shell egg, we are also investing in the added value offerings of our business as we look to engage with consumers in alternative ways to consume our humble egg.

Back to the event, this year sees the largest number of trade stands attending on record, and our thanks go to all the exhibitors attending and helping to make this what we are sure will be a tremendous day.

Thanks must also go to all of the speakers at the conference. None of us should underestimate the time and effort required to get up there in front of us all.

Of course, our thanks must go to all at BFREPA for the time and effort put into pulling together an event of this scale, and it is a testament to their collective endeavours in driving a new format for the day which has certainly been of great success in attracting the largest attendance since the events inception.

And finally on behalf of us all at Noble Foods we hope you enjoy the day, and we look forward to catching up with many of you throughout the event.

Kind Regards

Graham Atkinson

Speaker Profile: James Baxter

Chairman, BFREPA

Scottish egg producer James Baxter will set out the bleak reality of dealing with a bird flu infection to farmers attending BFREPA Live 2023.

James, who farms near Stranraer and is also the chairman of the British Free Range Egg Producers Association (BFREPA), will speak publicly for the first time about losing almost 200,000 hens to a mandatory cull following a positive test in January.

James has now reordered his pullets and will be restocking in February 2024.

James had a complete contingency plan arranged through Livetec, vital in securing early compensation with the Scottish Government through the compensation scheme.

Delegates have an ideal opportunity to learn and ask questions that may prove invaluable should they be unlucky enough to get avian influenza.

It's a long, stressful road to be virus-free from dealing with culling, governments, accreditation schemes, packers, and insurance.

James's honest and open talk will cover his avian influenza journey, from losing an entire flock to how he sees his business recovering and the lessons learned.

Speaker Profile: Charles Macleod

Commercial Manager Layers, St David's Poultry Team

Mere access to water is not enough for today's performance poultry. With layer flocks consuming, by weight, twice as much water as feed, its nutritional value must not be dismissed or underestimated.

From whatever source it originates, the water provided for layer flocks must be clean and potable. Any contamination, however seemingly insignificant, will adversely affect flock performance.

Having operated and maintained private water systems for over 30 years, clean potable water is consistently achievable. All systems are unique and understanding the delivery system from source to point of consumption is the key to maintaining water in pristine condition.

Water supplied in the public main is only guaranteed potable to the supply company's registered meter. Many rural systems will have many meters of pipework between this and the point of consumption. Making sure that this is not a source of contamination is a vital first step to keeping water clean.

Charles spent over a decade managing pullet production at Humphreys, before joining St David's Poultry Team as Commercial Manager Layers in 2022. Using his depth of knowledge on bird husbandry, combined with his commercial acumen, Charles supports the St David's drive to help clients to be more efficient, and to improve the health, welfare and performance of their flocks, in a way that is economically balanced.

Speaker Profile: Nick Bailey

Managing Director, Joice & Hill

Nick is from rural Lincolnshire and studied Biochemistry at the University of Southampton. After a working holiday in Africa, Australia, and Thailand he started his career in the poultry industry at Joice and Hill Poultry Ltd. Under the tutorage of former Hillsdown Holdings CEO, Robert Haynes, he worked in various capacities in production and sales before becoming Managing Director in 2008.

In 2010, Hendrix Genetics bought the company, with Nick continuing as MD. Between 2013 and 2017, Nick was part of the Hendrix Genetics Layer management team, working as area director for Europe. He stepped down in 2017 to focus his time on the UK business and family.

During his time at Joice and Hill, Nick took the lead in the sales and marketing Hendrix Genetics egg layers developing sales from one million day-old chicks per year to one million day-old chicks per month. Key to this achievement was the development of a competent and experienced team of production, sales, and administration personnel.

Nick continues to play a role with the wider Hendrix Genetics Layer business through participation in projects and the European Distribution network.

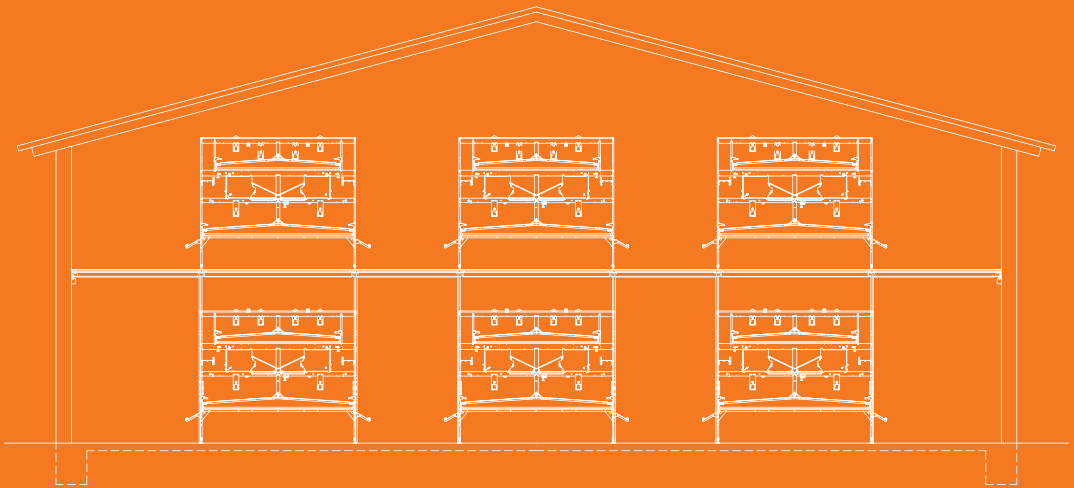

A keen cyclist, swimmer and snow boarder, Nick likes to remain physically active. He lives in Louth with his partner, family and two Labradors.

Meggsius Select

Automatic Egg Inspection

System for automatic egg inspection and sorting. Eggs can be sorted on the basis of external characteristics to four destinations. Every individual egg will be inspected on exterior indicators like quality and dimensions.

Reduce Daily Workload

The system ensures an objective and reliable quality assessment. This greatly reduces the daily workload. In addition to monitoring the process, the operator only takes care of the supply of packaging material and the removal of full packs such as pallets and trays with rejected eggs. Egg quality, reject category data (per hen house and/or day totals) is transparent and accessible for further analysis. To support the monitoring of the process, Meggsius Detect is part of the system. The Meggsius Detect detects leaking eggs from the egg infeed conveyor and offers the opportunity to remove these leaking eggs manually at an early stage in order to prevent soiling.

Symphiome™

Microbiome managed precisely

When it comes to optimal gut health, the microbiome should function like an orchestra playing in perfect harmony. Conducting this orchestra is Symphiome™, a unique first-of-its-kind Precision Biotic. Symphiome™ unique mode of action increases metabolic functions intrinsic to the bird's microbiome that detoxify unabsorbed amino acids and leaked host protein independent of the microbiota composition.

Symphiome™ is the first-of-its-kind Precision Biotic that optimizes your birds' resilience to enteric stress, aids in nutrient utilization, improves welfare, reduces emissions and maintains productive life of laying birds during challenges.

AVIAVIEW 2.0® AVIARY SYSTEM

All birds and nests are located at eye level which provides a perfect overview. The system provides the perfect environment for the production of large numbers of high quality eggs. Integrated walkways are easily accessible and make inspection of the upper nests easy.

COMFORT 2.0® AVIARY SYSTEM

The open, multi-tier system makes optimal use of the space in a new or existing house. Perches, feed and water are situated at different levels in the system to stimulate the natural behavior of the birds.
